

Idea Powered

Take away the polished concrete, the corrugated metal siding and the wood ceiling panels. Remove the rainwater collection system and take away the geothermal heating and daylighting systems. What's left? A strategic design and an idea. An idea to turn a conservative utility company into a leader in energy conservation. A functional building with industrial character, Heartland Consumers Power District will be a new LEED Platinum certified office building, working to encourage and provide renewable energy and energy efficiency. Now that's a bright idea.
